RITCHIE AND WELSH ACADEMY DROPPED FIGHT FILMS BARRED

tempts to Bring in Johnson-Willard Pictures.

In an opinion filed in the United States District Court yesterday in the onal Academy of Opera in Ritchie-Welsh film case Judge Charles M. Hough held that the contest bethe Theatre Champs Elysees in Paris tween the two lightweights in London on July 7, 1914, was in the technical meaning of the terms both a prizefight and a pugilistic encounter, although it was fought under conditions which classified it as a boxing match in London the now defunct Boston Opera Coming New York.

In consequence Judge Hough bars from the country the films of the fight imported by George F. Considine shortly after the match. Unless this decision doing theatrical work in Bridgeport, is reversed by the Appellate Court it will put an effective quietus on any renewed attempt to bring in the Johnson-

The Judge admits the apparent absurdity of the Sims act under which stablished primarily in America for the films were barred, but adds that the court has no alternative other than the court has to enforce the law. It is "undoubtedly a somewhat ridiculous result," he says, "that the films of a match which would be regarded as perfectly legal in many States cannot be legally shown in those States because they had to be imported into the country or shipped in inter-

In another part of his opinion the Judge remarks that the widely divergent decisions handed down by the courts in At the beginning of the negotiations an option was taken on the Theatre des Champs Elysees in Paris and on the services of Jean de Reszke, who was to be operatic director. Up to the present time these options have not been exercised.

"Up to the present time efforts to interest enough people in the plan have been somewhat disheartening. Then too as long as oversea difficulties and dangers exist it would be very hard to send American pupils to France for training. However, the options on the theatre and on the services of Jean de Reszke have not expired and there is yet a chance to get the undertaking on a satisfactory financial basis."

from dictionaries and articles from historical works, books of fiction and encyclopædias, some of which had been furnished by Assistant United States Attorney John E. Walker.

The crux of his learned discussion is that the Sims act applies to moving pictures of any voluntary fight between two or more men, with or without gloves, where money or anything of value is offered as a prize or gate receipts are divided.
